SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1936.

For the House to Consider.

Three things about the Sims-Carter anti-gambling bill would be remarkable:

1. That the race-track men should not fight it all along the line, including the time of its return to the House from the Senate.
2. That the majority of the House should back water on it when its convictions are plainly against it.
3. That the people of each district should not remember how their Representative voted upon it.

The Passing of a Myth.

Before the Bostonian Society this week a paper was read on "The Myth of Mary Chilton." The title is bold, indeed, in view of the fact that even generations not yet matured have been taught that the lady in question was the discoverer of Plymouth Rock. The venerable age to which the myth attained before its character became generally known was due for the most part to the lax methods employed by the writers of "popular history," which pot-boiling folks have a weakness for sentimental traditions, being also too lazy, or too incompetent to gather facts. Consequently, much of the stuff they have published is fiction masquerading under the name of history.

In the case of Mary Chilton it is plain that if they had taken the trouble to look into reliable records they would quickly have discovered the apocryphal character of the Plymouth Rock story. Not only was the Chilton woman not the first to land at Plymouth, but she was not even a member of the company that reached the Plymouth shore on December 21, 1620, the anniversary of which is now celebrated as Forefathers' Day. But Mary did land eventually, and married John Winslow, a brother of the governor, and she and her husband came to Boston after a time and bought, in 1667, the estate at the corner of Spring lane and Devonshire street, and when they died they were buried in King's Chapel burying ground.

But the Mary Chilton myth taught to school children until recently—we believe the spreading of this error has stopped—is only one of many which patient and painstaking writers are exposing one by one, and supplanting with the truth that is not only stranger but much livelier than fiction.

Guide, Not Curb, Athletics.

"The exaggeration of athletic sports in schools and colleges remains a crying evil," says President Eliot, of Harvard, in his annual report, made public Friday, and Dr. Eliot then urges again that the number of intercollegiate contests be reduced to two in each sport during any one season.

But it is not the number of games or the number of sports that touches the real foundation of this school-athletic question. The larger the number of sports that are cultivated the better, since it opens up fields for men of varying size, strength, and inclination. The number of contests is immaterial, except in a sport which puts a heavy strain on the participant.

The real remedy for the exaggeration of athletics—and exaggeration undoubtedly does exist—can be reached by an agreement among the leading colleges to put sports back again where they absolutely belong, into the purely amateur, recreation class. In other words, by providing competent medical inspection and careful physical training, so that the boys may be in good condition for their contests, and then eliminate the training table, and all the costly accompaniments that go today with the games.

Let the boys go into sports exactly as they have been going into them when attending public schools, and as they will go into them when they become business and professional men. Wipe out everything that savors of professional methods. Let the boys take up the sports as a recreation, coached only by their fellows, playing only on their own grounds. In this way the terrific expenses will be done away with, and the admission fees, which never belonged to schoolboy sports, can be abolished. The boy will keep up his interest in sports, but at the same time he will get rid of the present tendency to live and breathe nothing but sports from the day training begins until the final contest. The real ideal of genuine amateur intercollegiate sports for the honor of the school and the pleasure of the contest will then be attained.

But this move cannot be made by any one college alone—possibly not by two colleges. Such a move would be almost suicidal for a single college, since a college, primarily a place of instruction, can do the most good only by having the largest number of scholars it can accommodate, and in these days it cannot obtain those scholars, it cannot grow as it ought, unless it holds its own in athletics. This might as well be recognized at once as an axiom. No college, therefore, ought to put itself in a position where its influence may be retarded. But if several colleges of the same class agree upon "sport for sport's sake," all will start upon an equal plane, and the exaggeration of athletics will be cut down.

Three Measures, All Important.

The Times has been asked many times of late, particularly by members of Congress who will have to decide the fate of the pending gas legislation, which of the three measures before Congress is most important; which is essential, and which non-essential.

Those measures are:

1. Provision that gas must be sold for public purposes in the District at not over 75 cents per 1,000 feet; passed the House practically unanimously, after considerable discussion.
2. Bill to repeal the inflation section of the gas law of 1896; reported unanimously to the House by the District Committee.
3. Bill to reduce the price of gas for private consumption, at once, to 90 cents. Its report agreed upon by House committee.

To say which of these measures is most important would not be easy. All of them ought to become law in order to accomplish a logical settlement of the gas questions pending.

First in urgency, without doubt, comes the measure to repeal the inflation section. It is urgent because procedure is already on foot to take advantage of the inflation privilege. If the company's capitalization is doubled, reduction of prices will be difficult or impossible.

The measure to reduce the price of gas to the District government is important for this reason:

That it opens the way to secure determination of a reasonable price of gas, without possibly inflicting any injustice on any interest. The House committee and the House have decided that about 75 cents would be a fair and safe price. If that price is fixed by law for public gas consumption, the gas company may either enjoin it as confiscatory, or accept it without protest. If the rate be enjoined, there will be a judicial consideration of the whole question of gas prices; witnesses will be heard, and it will be decided if this rate is remunerative. If it is not, no harm will be done the gas company; if it is, then there will be no doubt about the propriety, at the next session of Congress, of giving the general public the same rate.

But, as everybody seems agreed that there ought to be some measure of immediate relief for over-charged private gas users, the proposition to reduce to 90 or 85 cents, which nobody doubts would be accepted by the gas company and would be compensatory, ought to pass. The three measures would thus—

1. Assure against the stock-watering job being carried into effect.
2. Effect a large saving in the price of gas for public use.
3. Open the way to a judicial determination whether 75 cents is a fair price for gas.

4. Provide, pending that determination, a measure of immediate relief to the public.

Considering the whole situation, therefore, the friends of the movement for public and private relief, believe that the three measures ought all to become law at this session.

California, it is explained, is determined to have Japanese exclusion not later than next session, even if getting it does force the rest of the country to fight Japan. Like Artemus Ward, California is so full of patriotism that it would be perfectly willing to send all its wife's relations to the front.

The Interstate Commerce Commission decided to give theatrical people the benefit of the 2-cent railroad rate, but it has not been able to perfect any arrangements by which the actors may assure themselves of making connections with the 2 cents.

Mr. Hobson announces that he is going right on with the fight. Mr. Hobson has a fighting record which makes the statement mean something, too.

Good evening; have you decided whether you will wear your Merry Widow to church tomorrow?

It is declared by Senator McCarren that something will be done soon in Brooklyn. It is declared by Boss Murphy that somebody has already been done in Brooklyn.

Pan-Islamism hasn't panned out very well in the initial effort, down in Morocco, to terminate European interference in African affairs.

EASTER IN CAPITAL CHURCHES WILL BE CELEBRATED BY SPECIAL MUSIC.

Every Christian church will be filled tomorrow with the triumphant songs of Easter Day, and the resurrection of Christ from the dead will be proclaimed in glad song. All alike will join in celebrating the most joyous festival in the whole Christian calendar. The children will sing their simple songs of rejoicing in the Sunday schools, and at the later services choirs and congregations will unite in hymns of praise.

This year will see a change in Easter celebrations in many Washington churches. Some of the Catholic churches have conformed with the order of the Pope since last year and have full vest-ed male choirs. Their programs are awaited with the keenest interest.

Special services will be held in all the churches and the day will be generally celebrated by the singing of the joyful music written for the day. Following are the musical programs which have been arranged:
